From thence it follows Jonathan Knight's survey of the Baltimore & Ohio Raifroad up Muddy creek and strikes Ten Mile creek at Bridgeport, one mile cast of Waynesburg. We understand it is the intention of the engineers to follow the Knight survey up Ten Mile creek to the dividing ridge between its waters and Wheeling resek, and from thence down to the city of Wheeling. From here the engineers will return to the Monongahela rives to perfect their survey before proceeding westward. We are not informed who is the projector of this road. Some think it is Mr. Vanderbilt, others Juy Gould, and the problem remains as unsolved as that of who struck Billy Patterson. The solution of the problem is not important to our citizens, so the road is made—this is the great desideratum/for it will develop the resources of our country, bring in capital business reconsistion and enhance the this is the great desideratum, for it will develop the resources of our country, bring in captal, business, population, and enhance the

The fact that along its pathway, breaking through the men who were elected in the South by levees, overflowing plantations, drowning fraud and violence are being weeded out the stock, and driving the people from their homes. The old Governor is too shrewd tered. The trouble is not alone to build a politician not to see that the nominer embankments high enough and strong for Vice President next time, after the enough to prevent an overflow, but death of a President so soon after his is to prevent the bed of the inauguration, must not stand in an inconriver from constantly filling up and rising, thus not increasing the depth of water will demand homogeneity for the successful when most needed in the summer for navigation, but constantly increasing the lia- side or the other; but as events are now bility to an overflow period as the bottom shaping themselves, the men elected

Capt. Cowdon who has become well weariness of the public of all war issues, known on account of his large acquaint- and their determination to have, if posance with everything that relates to the sible, an era of cordial national feeling history of the Mississippi river for a generation past, and who has studied all its pscularities, as well as those of its tribu-taries, has for years past denounced the proposed expenditure of untold millions for embankments as a perfectly useless waste of money. He has persistently claimed that there is but one way to relieve the river, and that is through an outlet system. He is now at Washington urging his views upon the Mississippi River Improvement Committee of Congress. He says that the value of his ideas can be fully tested for a very small amount of money as compared with the amount demanded by those who advocate the embankment system, by the construction of a sanal between the Mississippi and Lako Borgne, just below New Orleans. The cost need not exceed $300,000, and he has prepared a map which illustrates the bearings of his scheme. He claims that the old flow-line of the Mississippi was seventeen feet lower than the present line, and the river emptied into the Gulf at New Orleans instead of 120 miles below that point. The embankments as a perfectly useless waste instead of 120 miles below that point. The tendency of the river is to fill in at the bottom, thereby raising its level, and the levees already constructed have served to increase this evil. If $100,000,000 be expended by the Government to build a more extensive system of levees for the Mississippi and its affluents the bed of the river will be raised still higher and the danger of flood increased in proportion, the pitch or fall of the river from Cairo to the mouth or fall of the river from Cairo to the mouth will be materially lessened, and the capacity for outflow at the lower end of the river will be so much smaller than the inflow at the upper end as to make an overflow or breaks inevitable, no matter how high or strong the embankment may be. Captain Cowdon's plan contemplates an escape for the surpins water through outlets at the most favorable points. He would keep spen the Bonnet Carre, surd less the face of the contemplates and the light water level at New Orleans from four to six feet between 1874, when the river broke through at Bonnet Carre, and 1880, when two of the passes at the month were obstructed in the interest of the jettles. He would make a new and larger outlet into Lake Borgne a few miles below New Orleans, and another above. New Orleans in the l'Isquemines district. But he asks from Congress in the first place that $300,000 shall be set aside for the construction of the Lake Borgne outlet, which, he is sure, will of itself demonstrate the efficiency of his plan. Certainly it is more reasonable to risk that amount of money in the imitation of nature's method than to spend 200 times as much in an effort to resist natural forces by artificial embankments. The present floods will not be without compensation if they operate to show Congress that the outlet system at a cost of a few hundred thousand dollars will furnish more relief than the embankment system at a cost that may reach a hundred millions.

The picture on the first page of the third number cost for the engraving alone two hundred and fifty dollars, while one will shortly appear in the department of Household Decoration, in the same paper, for which the engraver is to receive four hundred dollars, and the designer also a large sum additional. Yet we believe the publishers are justified in such expense by the appreciation of the American public for really first class work. † Dally except Sunday.
